WESTERN HOSTS CONSIDERING COLLEGE PROGRAM

St. Joseph, Mo. — Feb. 4, 2004 — For many adults, thinking about going back to college or going for the first time can be overwhelming and intimidating. In an effort to calm their fears and answer their questions, Missouri Western State College will host a Considering College seminar for those adults thinking about enrolling in college for the first time or coming back after an absence. The seminar will be from 2-4 p.m. Feb. 9 in the Fred Eder Student Services/Classroom Building, room 208. To sign up for the program or for more information, contact Ellen Kisker at (816) 271-4280. Preregistration is encouraged.

Prospective students will have an opportunity to learn about enrolling, getting financial aid, finding resources on campus, choosing a major and more. A short tour of the campus will be offered.

“Considering College is important because it gives the potential student a chance to see the campus in a nonthreatening manner. The folks attending meet with helpful resource staff and meet other nontraditional students who are already attending this campus,” says Kisker, director of nontraditional student services. “I hope that adults will go away feeling that nontrads are a welcome segment of our student population.”

Kisker said Considering College addresses nontraditional students' fears, such as competing successfully in college after being out of school, finances and trying to juggle multiple responsibilities at home and work.
