President’s Perspective

Dear Alumni and Friends,

This fall, I had the unique opportunity to host my predecessors on campus. Dr. Janet Gorman McCarthy attended the annual Convocation on Critical Issues in September and in October, Dr. M.O. Looney and Dr. James Scanlon helped us to celebrate our 40th anniversary as a four-year baccalaureate degree granting institution during Homecoming. Talking with them was, for me, like taking a one-hour seminar in the history of Missouri Western. These were the individuals who have touched, directed and transformed the lives of many students. Each had his or her own challenges, yet each preserved the academic integrity of Western so as to contribute to what is now our fifth straight year of record enrollment.

Today, our challenge is one of maintaining excellence during this time of decreasing budgetary resources. For fiscal year 2011, the governor has asked that state institutions of higher education not increase their tuition with the promise that our state appropriation would be reduced by as little as 5.2 percent. This would be the second straight year in which we are unable to raise tuition to meet the needs of educating our growing student population. Last January, we agreed to hold our tuition at its current rate for Fiscal Year 2010 with the promise that we would receive the same state appropriation as we did in Fiscal Year 2009. Some legislators have indicated that 5.2 percent may not be enough of a reduction.

Currently, our budget is based on state appropriations of which $3.3 million is funded through federal stabilization efforts, $2.7 million of our own reserves, and tuition and fees. In the next fiscal year, we will have to find a way of reducing our budget by at least 5.2 percent (approximately $1.2 million) and begin reducing our use of cash reserves. In preparation for these challenges, we have already eliminated four administrative positions, suspended sabbaticals for faculty, suspended awards for faculty, staff, and administrators; placed a hiring freeze on all open positions and reduced faculty pay for summer school.

Over the course of the next year, you will receive continued information from the university as to how Western is facing this current challenge. You will also receive suggestions as to how you, our alumni and friends, can assist us as we progress. As in the past, it will take all of us within the Western community to persevere as we continue on our mission of transforming the lives of students.

Western is developing several new online courses, according to Dr. Gordon Mapley, dean and executive director of the Western Institute. He said the university has been developing online courses for several years, but they continue to increase the number of offerings.

Incentives were provided last spring to 16 faculty members to develop new online courses. The incentives included release from teaching a course that semester, financial compensation for overload, a notebook computer, software related to development of online courses and training in the use of that software.

“We want to offer course opportunities for students at all stages of life, including full-time workers or those with full-time responsibilities,” Gordon said. “Online courses serve time-bound, place-bound or financially restricted students.”

Nine of the new courses developed in the spring were offered last fall and the remainder are being offered this spring. In total, 89 online courses were offered last fall, and of that number, 45 have been developed since Spring 2009, thanks to the incentives offered. The goal is to offer 125 online courses by Spring 2011.

“More and more, possession of a college degree is critical to employment with family-sustaining wages, and online courses offer an opportunity to those who cannot enroll in a traditional on-campus college course.”

But Gordon said online courses will not replace on-site courses. “The goal is to provide citizens of the region with additional opportunities to obtain college credits and earn degrees.”

A research paper produced by a 2007 research team with subsequent work and in collaboration with students and faculty at Davidson College in North Carolina was published in July by the Journal of Biological Engineering. Science web sites around the world reported on the paper, which was accessed more than 13,000 times in the first four days after publication. At press time, it was still the most accessed article on the journal’s web page.

Additionally, the paper was evaluated by Faculty of 1000 Biology, an online research service, and was rated as “recommended reading and of interest to specialists.”

The article, “Solving a Hamiltonian Path Problem with Bacteria,” explains current research in genetically engineering E. coli bacteria, creating bacterial computers to solve a mathematical problem called the Hamiltonian Path Problem.

A team from Western and Davidson published work in the same publication in 2008, detailing their work to produce bacterial computers that could solve another classical mathematical problem known as the Burnt Pancake Problem.

That article, too, was published worldwide and is the second most accessed article in the history of the Journal of Biological Engineering.
Alumna named provost and vice president

Dr. Jeanne Daffron ’75, was named provost and vice president of academic and student affairs at Western last August after Dr. Joseph Bragin retired in June.

“Jeanne has earned the respect and trust of her colleagues,” said Dr. Robert Vartabedian, Western’s president. “She is a strong advocate of Western’s mission of applied learning and understands well the important role the university plays in the community.”

Jeanne started at Western as a faculty member in the department of nursing in 1977. She chaired the department in 1996-1997, and then served as dean of the College of Professional Studies from 1997 to 2004. Jeanne became assistant vice president for academic and student affairs in 2004 and has twice served as interim vice president, including the two months following the retirement of Joseph. She also served as interim dean of graduate studies.

“I’m honored and look forward to working with my colleagues in this new role as we continue to provide quality educational opportunities for our students,” Jeanne said. “These are exciting times at Western, and not just for those of us on campus. Higher education is truly a team effort, and our excitement is shared by Western’s alumni and supporters in the community.”

As provost and vice president for academic affairs, Jeanne is responsible for organizing, coordinating and providing leadership for the academic programs of the university. She oversees the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the College of Professional Studies, the Craig School of Business and graduate studies, as well as admissions, the library, the registrar’s office, and the Western Institute.

Jeanne, a registered nurse, received an associate degree in nursing and a bachelor of science in psychology from Western, a bachelor of science in nursing from Northwest Missouri State University, a master of public administration degree with an emphasis in health policy and planning from the University of Missouri-Kansas City, and a doctorate in nursing from Texas Women’s University.

Joseph began serving as Western’s provost and vice president in 2006.

During his tenure, Western experienced record enrollment each of the three years he served as the university’s chief academic officer. He oversaw the creation of Western’s first graduate programs, and helped hood the first master’s degree recipients during the spring commencement ceremony.

A foundation for great music

Western music students have the opportunity to have their musical performances heard around the globe and also gain experience in the music industry, thanks to the St. Joseph Music Foundation.

The Foundation is a nonprofit organization of musicians (or people who love music) that was started in 2005 to give area musicians an opportunity to come together. Michael Fuson, who attended Western for more than three years right after high school before moving out of state, serves as the Foundation’s president.

One of Michael’s first projects for the Foundation was creating a web-based radio station. Last year, there were almost 56,500 hits on the web site’s station in one quarter, and about one third of those listeners were outside of the United States. The 24-hour station is similar to European radio stations, Michael said, where all types of music are played on one station.

Any musician in the area is welcome to submit their work, and Anthony Glise, instructor of music at Western, encourages his students to do so. If the students’ music is copyrighted, he said, they will receive a royalty from the station.

“You can listen to music that comes directly from St. Joseph artists, and the more St. Joseph music we put on the air, the more St. Joseph is recognized nationally and internationally,” Anthony said. According to Anthony, not only is an organization like the Foundation a rarity, but he knows of no other music foundation that has its own web radio station.

Western students also have an opportunity to complete an internship with the Foundation’s radio station, and one student took advantage of that this past year. “For a student to come in real and live (on a radio station) is a great opportunity,” Anthony said.

The Foundation also offers a chance for students to network with musicians who have a lot of experience. Students can learn from the pros, as the Foundation regularly holds masterclasses at the local Café Acoustic, where professional musicians share their techniques and answer questions.

“Those music students who have been involved in the Foundation have found it invaluable,” Anthony said. “It’s all about camaraderie and support.”

Both Michael and Anthony say they want the Foundation to form more connections with Western’s music department, including having a regular time slot on the web radio station devoted solely to Western performing groups.

One important partnership between the Foundation and the university is the International Guitar Festival, which will be held May 13-17 this year. The festival will feature four concerts, including the final competition, jam sessions after each concert and classes taught by the performers. The festival is unique, Anthony says, not only because attendees have an opportunity to meet with the performers and get to know them, but also because the performers stay with home hosts.

For more information about the Foundation, check out the Foundation’s web site at www.stjosephmusicfoundation.org. The website for guitar festival information is http://www.missouriwestern.edu/guitarfestival.
Brenda Lindstrom: Semper Fidelis

Two years ago, Brenda Lindstrom was sampling entries at the annual United Cerebral Palsy chili cookoff in the Civic Arena. “I walked upstairs and saw three Marines in a League uniform and beers in hand. I knew I’d found my home,” Brenda, a Western student, said with a laugh.

Brenda joined the Marine Corps in 1992 and had planned on making it her career, but her plans were dashed when a knee injury ended her military service five years later.

The Marines she met at the cookoff were part of the Northwest Detachment #180 Marine Corps League and Brenda immediately joined the group. Last spring she was elected as the League’s first female commandant. In the summer, she was appointed vice commandant of the western division of the League.

“They are an outstanding group of individuals,” she said. “When I got out (of the Marine Corps), I felt I lost a part of myself. This detachment has helped me find my place in the world. It’s exactly what I needed.”

The League, the only one in northern Missouri, provides honor detail at veterans’ funerals, usually about three or four a month. “Every veteran has earned it,” Brenda said of the honor detail. “We feel strongly about providing it no matter which branch they served in; the inter-service rivalry ceases at that point.”

The League has conducted opening ceremonies at the annual Freedom Festival in Skidmore, Mo., and serves as color guard for veterans’ ceremonies and parades throughout northwest Missouri. There are currently 57 members, and Brenda would love to increase those numbers, especially with young Marines.

Brenda enrolled at Western after graduating from Savannah High School in Savannah, Mo., but only stayed a semester. After several jobs that included a stint in Houston, she joined the Marines and served as a military police officer. She said she wouldn’t change her military experiences for anything.

“For anyone who hasn’t stood on yellow footprints at 3 a.m. in boot camp with someone yelling at you, it’s hard to explain,” she says of what she learned in the military. “It’s very hard to describe to someone why we do what we do, what drives us to carry on in the face of adversity.”

She returned to Western in the fall of 2007 to work on a computer information systems degree and plans to graduate in December 2010.

“No matter where you go, if you see the eagle, globe and anchor (Marine Corps symbol), you know you have a friend and family.”

We’re moving! Students who call for the annual fund’s Phonathon want to let you know that we are moving the Phonathon from the fall to the spring – they will contact alumni in February and March.

$450,000 grant

The Missouri Regional Center for Public Safety Innovation (MO-RCPI) at Western received a $450,000 grant from the federal Department of Justice to continue its national training mission. Sen. Claire McCaskill announced the grant award.

MO-RCPI began delivering training to law enforcement officers across the country two years ago, after receiving a $714,000 grant from the Department of Justice’s Office of Justice Programs, Bureau of Justice Assistance.

“In the last 18 months, we’ve done more than 250 days of training from coast to coast,” said Bryan Courtney ’96, MO-RCPI director. More than 2,500 officers from more than 2,000 federal, state, local and tribal law enforcement agencies have attended training sessions, including Gangs 101, Campus Crime Prevention, Counter Terrorism Awareness, and The Seven Habits for Highly Effective People for Law Enforcement, said Bryan.

Possible future training subjects include law enforcement officer suicide prevention, intelligence-led policing and reducing crime through traffic enforcement.

The RCPI also gives Western students applied learning and internship opportunities, Bryan said. Undergraduates have served as interns and student workers in the RCPI, and Bryan has been able to use his contacts with law enforcement agencies to place students in external internships locally and nationally. Those contacts can also help students start their law enforcement careers after graduation.

Editor’s note

The photos that accompanied the article in the Fall 2009 issue about Western students who traveled to Ecuador were taken by Juan Miguel Espinoza.
Huey Shi Chew is excited. In fall 2008, as the newly hired international student coordinator, she held an orientation for two international students who were new to Western. This past fall, she welcomed 16 new students, and three international students who started last spring helped her with orientation. With the fall enrollment, Western increased its international student population from six to 23, and the students represent 12 different countries. The university also welcomed its first international graduate student in the fall.

Huey Shi admits the numbers may be small, but she says the structures across campus are beginning to fall into place and she believes the numbers will continue to grow. In fact, an intensive English program was started last spring which will help attract more Asian students. Huey Shi explained that Asia holds the biggest share of international students, and they usually don’t speak English.

How the current international students came to be at Western is as diverse as their backgrounds. Along with Huey Shi’s efforts, the music department recruited six piano majors from South Korea. Two Australian students were recruited by the athletics department – one for tennis and one for softball. Two students transferred from area community colleges, one from Afghanistan joined his friend who was already a Western student, and four are exchange students from European universities. The graduate student from Bangladesh, Sujoy Kumar Chowdhury, found Western online.

Last fall, Dr. Matthew Edwards, associate professor of music and director of keyboard studies, visited Yonsei University and Seoul Arts High School in South Korea to continue to develop relationships, as three of Western’s current Korean piano students attended that high school. Additionally, this spring, Dr. Robert Vartabedian, Western’s president, is planning to travel to China to wrap up an agreement with two universities for Chinese students to earn two years of college credit there and complete their degree at Western.

Huey Shi said the international students in the residence halls are bonding with each other and planning several activities together. She started a coffee hour for international students and international faculty, which has been a big hit. International students and faculty also got together for several activities in the fall. “I bring people together and they have all the ideas. They are making the plans,” Huey Shi said.

As Western continues to attract more international students, she says her job is to continue to make sure the structures remain in place so they have a good experience here. “I’m building on that personal touch.”

Afghan student welcomes internationals

Ahmad Shah Salimiee moved into his room in Logan Hall one day early this past fall so he could be on hand to greet the 16 newly arrived international students, answer their questions and make them feel welcome. The Afghanistan native has been a Western student since the spring semester 2009, so he knows how important it is to feel welcome on a foreign campus.

Ahmad Shah graduated from the International School in Kabul, where most of the students, he said, plan to enroll in American or European universities after they graduate. He found out about Western from the school’s principal, Gail Goolsby, who is from St. Joseph.

He thinks going to an international school probably helped him avoid any culture shock when he arrived in St. Joseph, and language wasn’t an issue, either. Ahmad Shah knows English and the two native Afghan languages, Pashto and Dari; and, because he lived in Pakistan for several years as a child, he knows two Pakistani languages, Urdu and Hindi.

Ahmad Shah admits that he misses his family (he is the oldest of six children) and his home country, so the arrival of another Afghan student, Abdul Rashid Khalili, from his high school this past fall meant a lot to him. “I couldn’t believe we were talking in our own language, I was so excited,” he said. “I love having him here.” The two are roommates in Logan Hall.

This past fall, Ahmad Shah, along with Hye-Yoon Cho and Mi Ra Lee, two students from Korea who had also arrived for the Spring 2009 semester, helped Huey Shi Chew, international student coordinator, with orientation for the new international students. “We tried our best to give them the feeling that they should know all the buildings. We tried to help them,” he said.

Ahmad Shah had planned to major in business management at Western, but while dealing with delays in obtaining his student visa for several months, he got involved with an organization and attended some government meetings in Afghanistan. That made him change his mind and his major to political science. “Hopefully I can go back and get involved in government. I think I can help.”

He said some students have been asking him questions about his home country, but he doesn’t mind. “I really appreciate their questions and I appreciate their interest. I say to them, ‘Don’t feel like you’re going to offend me. Ask me anything you want.’”

RPDC at MWSU

The Missouri Legislature recently allocated funding for a new Regional Professional Development Center (RPDC) located on Western’s campus, and Dr. Sherry Copeland was named its director. The center serves school districts in Buchanan, Clay and Platte Counties.

RPDCs work directly with school districts in their region to provide professional development to teachers and administrators. The legislature approved two additional centers to bring the number in the state to 11, and all are associated with campuses.

“There will be a very collaborative relationship between Western and this RPDC,” Sherry said. “The university is taking a front and center role in the center.” Most of the workshops for the area schools, she said, will be held on campus.

Fall 2009 enrollment numbers

• Full-time students – 4,089, the first time Western has had more than 4,000 full-time students.
• Undergraduate – 5,665. Graduate – 70.
• Credit hours enrolled – 66,922, a five percent increase from last fall.
• First-time freshmen – 1,185.

Foundation welcomes new board members

At its October meeting, the MWSU Foundation elected four new members: Seth Wright, an attorney at Polsinelli Shughart PC, was elected to a two-year term; Dave Shinneman, president of Shinneman Management Company, to a one-year term; and Jennifer Kneib ’89, branch manager of MetLife Home Loans; and Dirck Clark ’85, chief business development officer at Heartland Health, to full three-year terms.

Thank you to retiring board members Loah Stallard, who served 12 years; and Todd Ehler, who served three years.

Sophomore Lindsay O’Neal sees the planet as a large puzzle, and she likes to explore how everything fits together and the role of humans in it. That was one of the reasons she decided to participate in Energy and Life, Western’s Outdoor Semester, a multi-disciplinary program that included travel along with the classroom work.

For 13 days this past fall, seven students, four faculty members and one community member trekked from Missouri to Wyoming with stops in Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota, touring several facilities to learn firsthand about wind, solar, geothermal, hydroelectric power, fossil fuels and nuclear power.

They also enjoyed beautiful landscapes, museums, a lot of wildlife (student Josh Swindler called bison “incredibly arrogant”), waterfalls and snow.

Dr. Ken Dagel, associate professor of geography, taught Sustainable Energy, one of the course requirements for the Outdoor Semester, and arranged the tours of all the energy facilities. He likes that Outdoor Semester gives students the background in the classroom and then actual experiences on the trip.

“Energy is an area that a lot of people don’t have a good understanding of, and I wanted to expand students’ information. When they actually get to look at the facilities, it really puts things into perspective.”

Ken said they even visited a coal mine in Wyoming that is St. Joseph’s coal provider. “I hope students gained a better understanding of energy in general, what we’re using right now and how that impacts the physical environment.”

Dr. Elizabeth Latosi-Sawin, professor of English, said the trip taught the students about competing land use interests and a lot about nature and wildlife. She arranged the visit to Yellowstone National Park, which included spending an entire day with two biologists who helped the students observe wolves.

“It was awesome,” Lindsay said. “We heard them howl. It was breathtaking.”

Elizabeth’s Environmental Literature class was also a required course for the Outdoor Semester, and students had the option to enroll in Fitness and Wellness, Writing and Research and Introduction to Psychology as part of the program, as well.

Student Kurt Morrison said one thing he liked about the trip was the variety of places that they visited, which included energy plants, museums and parks. “It was a great opportunity,” Kurt said of the trip. “I have always been interested in renewable energy.”

He said Yellowstone was a real treat, because they stayed in cabins with no televisions or distractions. “It was nice to be separated from the hustle and bustle of daily life for awhile.”

“We wanted to help students understand our planet and our position on it,” Elizabeth said. “They learned a great deal.” ☛

Encouragement: paying it forward

Two alumni, Rose Briscoe ’92 & ’95, and Teri White ’01, became instructors in the criminal justice/legal studies department this fall and are great inspirations to their students.

“The first day of class, I told my students that if they ever got discouraged, come and talk to me,” said Rose, who teaches a Criminal Evidence class. “I said by the time I told them my story, they’d be ready to get back up and try again.”

Rose, a criminal defense attorney with the Missouri Public Defender System, knew she wanted to be a lawyer from the time she was seven years old, but she had no idea how difficult it would be to achieve her goal.

After earning an associate degree in legal studies and then a bachelor’s in criminal justice from Western, she had to apply several times before she was admitted into law school because her Law School Admission Test (LSAT) score was lower than she had hoped. After five years of applying, she was finally admitted into the Thomas Cooley Law School in Lansing, Mich., in 1999.

It was great news, but there was one little glitch - she received her acceptance letter when she was nine months pregnant. A short stint at Thomas Cooley told her it wasn’t the right time, so she stepped out and re-applied three years later. She attended Thomas Cooley for a year, earned great grades and transferred to Washburn University School of Law in Topeka, Kan. By then a single parent, she planned to commute from St. Joseph, Mo., but that only lasted one semester before she had to drop out to earn some money. But Rose never gave up. She returned to Washburn and finally earned her degree in 2006.

“Students may not be able to see it at the moment, but all the challenges they are facing right now will make them better, stronger and smarter,” she says. “How I got my law degree was the hardest thing I had to do in my life. But I did it.” continued on page 26

He has been appointed music director for the 2010 junior session orchestra.

Rockhurst Agreement

Western and Rockhurst University in Kansas City, Mo., have signed an agreement to allow graduates of Western’s Steven L. Craig School of Business to more easily pursue a Master of Business Administration (MBA) degree.

Western graduates who take advantage of this opportunity will be able to complete their MBA degree at Rockhurst’s Helzberg School of Management in 30 credit hours if they meet the Helzberg School entrance requirements and enroll within one year of their graduation from Western. The program is commonly referred to as a “Fifth-year MBA.”

“Our two schools share a commitment to helping our students understand business through a combination of theory and real-world experience,” said Carol Roever, interim dean of the Craig School of Business. “With an undergraduate degree from the Craig School of Business and an MBA from the Helzberg School of Management, our graduates will be well prepared for the challenges of today’s business environment.”

Legal assistant program re-approved

This past August, the American Bar Association (ABA) House of Delegates granted re-approval to the legal assistant program, and the term of approval is for a period of seven years. The program has been approved by the ABA since 1986.

The site team report stated the following: “Missouri Western State University has a strong Legal Assistant Program. It has dedicated administration and faculty that present educational program for degree and certificate program students that meets ABA Guidelines for general education and legal specialty courses. The Program has a good reputation in the local legal community and has a strong advisory committee.”

Suzanne Kissock, JD, assistant professor, has been the legal assistant program director since 2006.
Western opened a door to Wall St. this fall when they converted a conference room in the Steven L. Craig School of Business into the Koenig-Simmons Trading Center. Designed to replicate a real trading room, a large-screen TV is continuously running a ticker of trading information, and 14 computers loaded with financial trading system software are giving students experience in what a trading room is really like.

Carol Roever, interim dean of the Craig School of Business, calls the room a “great convergence of energy,” because it was initiated by students, guided by faculty, and supported by alumni.

The alumni support came from two donors – Steven Koenig, who played football for Western in the 1980s, and Jeremy Simmons ’06, a managing director for Allied Business Group in Leawood, Kan.

Steven is managing director and co-head of Latin America Sales and Training for JP Morgan in New York, where he spends part of his workday in a trading room. He is a long-time Western supporter and visits at least once a year to lecture in the Craig School of Business.

Jeremy earned degrees in finance and economics from Western and wanted to support the trading room in memory of his brother, Jamie. Jamie was killed in a car accident when he was a freshman at Western in 2006, and Jeremy and his family have been holding annual basketball tournaments to raise money in his memory. When Jeremy found out about the possibility of a trading room on campus, the family decided to support that. “The trading room could help hundreds of students each semester,” he said.

Jeremy said he took an applied portfolio management class in graduate school at University of Kansas in Lawrence, where 30 students managed a portfolio with real money. “It was the best class I ever had. I would love to see Missouri Western have a class like that.”

“It’s a great opportunity for students. Some bigger universities don’t even have this,” Steven said. “This will set Missouri Western apart. This is unique.” He added that the room will be a great recruiting tool for prospective students.

The software, Financial Trading System, offers a real-time environment where students trade with each other. Students manage portfolios using live data from financial markets and learn how to operate in a trading room environment. Carol said the room will be used by finance professors, investment classes and several other courses, including Introduction to Business.

She said students will learn the principles in the classroom, then go to the trading center and immediately apply those principles. “It really captures what applied learning means,” she said.

Five finance students with a lot of initiative and vision was another converging factor, according to Carol. Two years ago, after attending a national conference for business students with Dr. Sangkyoo Kang, assistant professor of finance, the students returned to Western talking about establishing a trading room. They created a power point presentation for prospective donors and began writing letters. “They were so excited,” Carol said. “And Dr. Kang encouraged them.”

Larry Motley Jr. ’09, said he loved working on the trading room project, even though he knew he would graduate before it came to fruition. “But it was the most exciting time in my college career,” he said. “I truly enjoyed being a part of something so big; it was really special.” Larry said that in the future, he would love to see a student-managed investment fund at Western that uses real money.

“It’s awesome that we made it (the trading center) happen and made the university better for future students,” Larry said.

“Students can get an idea of what the market is about; I’m proud and honored to be a part of it,” Steven said. “I hope students will use it for years to come.”
Western inducted seven individuals and one team into its Athletics Hall of Fame during ceremonies Sept. 19: Carl Butcher ’72, LeAnn Martens-Francis ’86, Dave Sego ’77, Mike Solomon ’81, Vince Thomson ’86, Myron Unzicker, Cheryl Williams-Hobbs ’88, and the 1973-74 basketball team.

Carl, of St. Joseph, Mo., began his career at Western in 1980 and served as chair of the criminal justice/legal studies department for 15 of the 20 years he was there. He is a member of the Gold Coat Club Board and is a top fundraiser nearly every year. For 20 years, he ran the clock at every home football and basketball game. He also serves as the assistant chair for the Celebrity Golf Committee.

LeAnn, of Liberty, Mo., was a two-sport athlete whose volleyball career culminated with a second-team NAIA All-American selection in 1985. She finished with 491 kills and a career-high 278 blocks. She also received first-team District 16 and All-CSIC honors her junior and senior seasons. Her team placed fourth in the 1983 NAIA national tournament and earned a seventh place finish in 1985.

Dave played third base in more than 50 games in three out of the four seasons for the Griffons. He hit 41 RBIs his senior season to go along with a .364 batting average on 56 hits. He finished his career with 110 RBI and 174 hits. Dave lives in Southlake, Texas.

In the two years he was a starting quarterback, Mike, of Columbia, S.C., threw for 27 touchdowns, 18 of those coming in his senior season. Mike led the Griffons to a 1979 Moila Shrine Bowl victory where his team scored 72 points and he was named bowl MVP. He continued his career into the NFL and in 1981, signed a professional contract with the Kansas City Chiefs. He played in the Northern California League where he led his team to the championship game in 1981. He signed with the Boston Breakers of the USFL in 1983.

Vince received second team NAIA All-American honors in 1984. He was an All-CSIC performer both of the years he played for the Griffons. In 1984, he recorded four sacks for a loss of 33 yards and had another five tackles for loss. The Kansas City Chiefs selected him in the seventh round of the 1985 NFL draft before he went on to play in the Canadian Football League for two years. Vince lives in Cleveland.

Myron has served as an athletic trainer for Western for 25 years. He also teaches in the physical education department. Myron earned his bachelor’s degree in education from Northern Illinois University and his master’s in physical education from Ball State University.

Cheryl, of Overland Park, Kan., exploded onto the scene for the Griffon volleyball club in 1986, her junior year. She accumulated 1,156 kills and 489 blocks in two seasons. She received second team NAIA All-American honors in 1986. The CSIC and District 16 named her to their first team during her junior and senior seasons.

The 1973-74 men’s basketball team put together a 25-6 record and the school’s first appearance in the NAIA national tournament. The Griffons received the No. 13 overall seed in the tournament and won their opening round game against Monmouth, the school’s first victory in the NAIA tournament. A day later, they lost to the eventual runner-up. Western set an NAIA attendance record (8,284 people) at the loss.
Fall Sports

Football
National rankings and setting records were the themes for the 2009 edition of Griffon football. As the 40th season unfolded and as the victories mounted, each game marked another milestone in the Griffon record book. In mid-October, the team was ranked No. 12 nationwide in Div. II and third in the NCAA Super Region Four.

In the Griffon’s 49-7 home opener victory against Northern State, quarterback Drew Newhart threw five first-half touchdown passes, tying Kyle Westerberg’s 2003 performance against Missouri Rolla. One week later, Drew was part of another record, this time the longest pass and play from scrimmage in school history, a 98-yard scoring strike to wide receiver Cedric Houston. A defensive record fell a week later as free safety Nate Bruto’s 100-yard interception return for a touchdown broke open a close game and paced the Griffons to a 58-31 victory over Fort Hays State. A week later, it was the leg of place kicker Brad Beckwith providing the heroics. With the score tied at 34, Brad’s school-record 53-yard field goal as time expired sent the Family Day crowd of 5,011 into a frenzy and gave the Griffons to a 37-34 victory over Washburn.

A heartbreaker 35-34 loss against Missouri Southern gave Michael Hill a career-high 143 yards rushing on 28 carries and Drew a career-high 383 yards passing.

The Griffons ended the season 9-3 overall, 6-3 in the MIAA and a seventh appearance in the Mineral Water Bowl, where they defeated Augustana College, S.D., 34-21.

At the end of the regular season, 13 Griffons received MIAA honors, with Cedric Houston, wide receiver, and Nathan Martin, offensive lineman, named to the first team. They were also named to the All-Super Region 4 second team. Junior Steven Jones, offensive lineman, was named to the CoSIDA Academic All-America second team. Steven had earlier been named to the Academic All-District 7 first team, and Kip Peters, tight end, was named to the second team.

Women’s Soccer
A solid nucleus, plus added depth and some freshman speed have equaled some victories for the women’s soccer team, finishing the season with six wins and going 4-3-1 at home. The Griffons boasted two of the top 10 point scorers in the MIAA: Abby Widrig ranked fifth in the league in total points with 16, including six goals and four assists. Jessica Martin

Death by chocolate? Quite the contrary. Seth Lyons ’08, and his fiancé, Kelsey McFarland ’08, have brought a Rocky Mountain Chocolate Factory (RMCF) store back to life in Silverthorne, Colo., thanks to a Western benefactor and an innovative class in the Steven L. Craig School of Business.

It’s all part of the Craig School of Business’ focus on entrepreneurship, and it started when Steve Craig, who pledged $5.5 million to Western to establish the School of Business, found out about an RMCF that was closing in Silverthorne last year. He thought it would offer a great opportunity for a student in the School of Business to reopen the store, so he began working with Greg Pope, RMCF’s senior vice president, franchise development.

Western students who graduated in the fall of 2008 or were planning to graduate the following May were notified that they could enroll in an Applied Entrepreneurship course that could ultimately result in one of them having an ownership opportunity with Steve in the RMCF franchise.

“Organizationally we were very excited about the opportunity,” Greg said. “It was a way to see if a program like this could work.”

Seth, a business finance major, was one of four who took the class in the spring semester of 2009, taught by Rick Zimmer, instructor of business, and Dr. Faye Smith, professor of business. Seth had been working in management at a local auto parts store and planning to go to law school, but he always thought that one day he would like to be an entrepreneur, so he decided to take the class. The class visited the Silverthorne site for the store in March, and after the visit, he and Kelsey, who graduated with an economics degree, decided they would move out there if given the opportunity.

Seth was selected, and currently, Seth, Kelsey and Steve own an LLC that owns the RMCF franchise. The store, in a large strip mall right off Interstate 70, also sells ice cream and coffees along with the chocolate goodies. Seth and Kelsey create about half of the chocolate products right in the store.
“We are so pleased that Steve Craig’s vision and his confidence in our students created a unique opportunity for our students,” said Carol Roever, interim dean of the Craig School of Business.

Steve said the ownership opportunity for Seth and Kelsey includes something very unique— their alma mater’s willingness to stay involved with them and support them.

“Rick and the rest of the faculty are making themselves available for Seth and Kelsey so they are not overwhelmed right out of the box,” Steve said. “I don’t know of any other university that does that.”

Carol noted that the department has assigned Rick as a faculty mentor for Seth and Kelsey. Seth said he appreciates the university’s support and to return the favor, he hopes to hire a Western student as an intern.

The class taught him a lot, Seth said, but nothing could have prepared him for the amount of work it took to get the business open by Labor Day. “Kelsey has been great. I don’t know if we have ever worked that hard before.”

The chair of the Craig School of Business Advisory Council, Dave Shinneman, did understand what Seth and Kelsey were going through. Dave said he opened seven different McDonald’s restaurants throughout his career and he knows what it takes to get a new store opened.

So Dave drove 12 hours from St. Joseph, Mo., to Silverthorne to help stock shelves, open boxes and work 12 hours a day doing whatever needed to be done to help a fellow entrepreneur. “He helped us out a lot; we appreciate it,” Seth said.

“They are two great young people. I think they have what it takes to make it a success,” Dave said of Seth and Kelsey. “They understand the time it takes to be successful.”

“Business is going well,” Seth said. “We’re very excited.”

Death by chocolate? Quite the contrary. More like Kelsey and Seth by chocolate.
Dan Nicoson, executive director of the Foundation, is watching the economy closely these days, paying attention to interest rates and state funding and the economy’s impact on charitable giving. He says nonprofit organizations like Western are in somewhat of a tough spot.

“In the last two years, the economy has left more people feeling like they’re not in a good position to give, but decreasing state funding makes the university’s needs greater than ever.”

For fiscal year 2009 (ending June 30, 2009), Western received a five and a half percent increase in state appropriations from the previous fiscal year, but for fiscal year 2010, there was no increase in appropriations.

Additionally, the Foundation’s endowment fund lost $324,249 in fiscal year 2008, and in fiscal year 2009, the fund lost $1,408,992. Dan said Western’s Foundation has fared better than many universities throughout the economic downturn since it has a fairly conservative investment policy. For example, he said that about 50 percent of the Foundation’s investments are in stocks, so they have taken a lesser hit than university foundations that have a larger percentage of their funds in stocks.

That’s why undesignated funds are so important to the Foundation in the current economy, Dan said. “Undesignated funds are essential in tight budgetary times. We try to see what the needs are on campus that donors have not designated funds for.”

Those funds allow the university to respond to needs that were not necessarily anticipated at the beginning of the fiscal year. For example, a department may call and say they have an opportunity to buy a large budget item at a great price, and the Foundation may be able to partially fund it for them. The Foundation uses undesignated funds for those types of purchases if someone has not specified a donation for that purpose.

“Our prime responsibility is to make sure a restricted donation is used according to a donor’s designation. We take donor restrictions seriously and make sure they are met,” Dan said. “That is why undesignated funds, because of their flexibility, are so valuable throughout the year.”

Al Purcell, chair of the MWSU Foundation Board of Directors, said he likes that undesignated funds support students and faculty to travel to conferences and seminars to not only learn, but to present their research.

If you look at the Foundation’s figures, the total amount of undesignated dollars looks pretty good – $3,550,452. But Dan explained that of that total amount, only 37 percent – approximately $1,328,725 – is available for the Foundation to use each year. The balance, 63 percent, includes fixed assets, such as mineral rights, where only what is generated by the total can be spent; reserve funds, and pledges receivable, which is money pledged by a donor but not received by the Foundation yet.

In an effort to increase undesignated funds and encourage consistent and regular giving, the Foundation established the Western League for Excellence in 2005. Dan said by enrolling, League members say they intend to make an annual undesignated gift at a certain level. Members are recognized in the Foundation’s annual report and are complimentary guests at the annual Foundation appreciation dinner each spring. Currently there are almost 350 members; Dan would like to see membership at 500 (the current list of members starts on page 18).

Al and his wife, Annie, are charter members of the League. “We believe the university is a vital asset to the community. When we can provide Ten years after his death in 1999, the MWSU Foundation received a gift from the charitable remainder trust of John Vaselakos, valued at approximately $500,000. John established the trust with the stipulation that the trust terminate 10 years after his death and that the Foundation receive 50 percent of the fund value. The gift is undesignated.

John, who was born in 1926, was an avid supporter of Western. He was a member of the Foundation Board of Directors and one of the founders and charter members of the athletics department Gold Coat Club. He was a contributor to Leah Spratt Hall and the capital campaign in 1995. John also served on the campaign for the lighting project of Spratt Memorial Stadium and the committee to finance the clock tower. One of Western’s residence halls was named in honor of his wife, Betty, and him when it was completed in 1995.

John and Betty, who died in 1994, were honorary members of the Heartland Health Foundation and were active in the American Cancer Society, St. Joseph Safety Town, the St. Joseph Area Chamber of Commerce, Ronald McDonald House, Boy Scouts of America, St. Joseph Symphony and Camp Quality.

He and his brother, Pete, began the McDonald’s restaurant franchise in St. Joseph, Mo., in 1963 and eventually owned three restaurants in the city. John retired in 1990.

“We are grateful for the generosity of John Vaselakos,” said Jerry Pickman ’85, director of development. “Supporters like him are very important to Western.” Jerry noted that a charitable remainder trust like the one John established is a good giving tool for people in certain circumstances. In a charitable remainder trust, the donor sets aside a certain amount of money in a trust, and the trust will pay the donor or designated beneficiary an annual income for the rest of their lives or for a set amount of years.

“There are a lot of advantages to it,” he said, explaining that the donor gets a tax deduction, it takes the money out of their taxable estate and it can be funded with stocks.

“John and Betty Vaselakos are two wonderful examples of the tremendous community support that Western has enjoyed since its earliest days as a junior college.”

-Jerry Pickman ’85, director of development

“Undesignated funds are so essential to the university that one of the goals of Achieving Greatness, Western’s capital campaign, was $1 million for emerging needs.

“We are really appreciative of those who have stayed the course and continued to give in these economic times,” Dan said.
The Western League for Excellence is an honorary society of donors to the MWSU Foundation in support of Western's mission. Contributions to the League are undesignated and provide the Foundation with the flexibility to meet current needs of the university. Members of the Western League for Excellence have expressed an intent to contribute at a certain level each year and are recognized in divisions according to their level of contributed support. The following roster contains the names of those individuals and businesses who are current members of the League as of June 30, 2009.

Western’s Alumni Day at Arrowhead was a huge success, drawing one of the largest crowds ever at an event sponsored by the Alumni Association, according to Colleen Kowich, director of Alumni Services. Her office sold 265 game and tailgate tickets to alumni and friends for the Kansas City Chiefs home opener Sept. 20.

It was also St. Joseph Day at Arrowhead, so alumni shared their tailgate with St. Joseph Area Chamber of Commerce Diplomats and Buchanan County employees for a total of 350 tailgaters.

“The food, the crowd, the game, it was all a lot of fun,” Colleen said. “Only one thing would have made it even better – a Chiefs victory.”

Colleen said she plans to make Alumni Day at Arrowhead an annual event. “Now mark your calendar for Alumni Day at the K,” she said, referring to the annual tailgate and game when the Royals and Cardinals meet up. Last year it was in St. Louis, and this year it will be held in Kansas City in June.

Dear Fellow Alumni,

When I finally sat down the evening of Saturday, Oct. 17, I was enthusiastically exhausted. Why? Because, between 3 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 14 and 5:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 17, more Missouri Western alumni than ever attended at least one of the 14 events planned during Homecoming. And those were only the alumni events; the students had a jam-packed schedule of their own, and many alumni attended some of those events as well.

This was truly a Homecoming to remember. From celebrating alumni and faculty accomplishments, to celebrating our Junior College days, to celebrating another football victory over the Mules of Central Missouri – the passion for all things Griffon was everywhere. We went back in time to ’69 and came away with a spirit that I hope will propel us through our centennial in 2015 and beyond.

I look forward to future alumni events and future Homecomings where we can come together, share a story, pay homage to our past and open new pathways to the future. We are Missouri Western alumni, each of us, and we are all Faithful, Proud and True.

Gregory VerMulm ’89
President
Missouri Western Alumni Association

Fourteen events in 96 hours; this year’s Homecoming had something for everyone,” said Greg VerMulm ’89, president of the Alumni Association. “And everyone had a great time.” Several new events, he said, were added to the Homecoming lineup this year as part of the 40th anniversary celebration of the campus.

One special event was the dedication of a plaque commemorating the St. Joseph Junior College building at 10th and Edmond. The Junior College was located at that site from 1933 to 1969, when the present campus opened. Dr. M.O. Looney, Western’s president from 1967 to 1983, was a special guest at the dedication. The plaque unveiling was followed by a tour of the junior college, now an apartment building, and a tea at the YWCA Terrace Room.

Another former president, Dr. James Scanlon, was also honored as part of Homecoming 2009. A portrait of his wife, Lauren, and him was unveiled in Scanlon Hall, Western’s newest residence hall.

The St. Joseph Alumni Chapter also hosted a new Homecoming event Wednesday of Homecoming week – “Alumni Night at the Museum,” a wine and cheese tasting at the Albrecht-Kemper Museum of Art. Another new event was held on Saturday - a Post-parade Party for alumni, students and employees, and their families, on campus.

This year, there were a number of groups that hosted reunions – marching band, Greeks, VIPs, Baptist Student Union – and all alumni were invited to Norty’s Bar & Grill in St. Joseph Friday evening.

In addition to the new events, the annual events were also held throughout Homecoming week. The Alumni Awards Banquet honored five alumni, a faculty member (see p. 22) and Alumni Association scholarship recipients in front of almost 200 on Thursday, and the third annual Run to the Max was held pre-parade to benefit Big Brothers, Big Sisters on Saturday. And of course, the parade and victory over the University of Central Missouri offered fun for everyone on Saturday, as well.

CHARLIE ’55, & PATTI (WILSON) ’55, BURRI

Charlie and Patti have been avid supporters of Western since their junior college days.

Patti helped start the college’s Faculty Wives Club and served as its first president. The group later became Missouri Western Women, which was a predecessor to the MWSU Ambassadors, which she also helped form. Today, Patti serves on the executive board of the Ambassadors.

Both Patti and Charlie have served on the Alumni Association Board of Directors. Charlie formed the Gold Coat Club and was named a lifetime member when he retired. He currently chairs the Hall of Fame committee and serves on the Celebrity Golf Classic committee.

Alumni making a DIFFERENCE, not a PROFIT

In 2007, according to the U.S. Department of Labor’s Bureau of Labor Statistics, there were more than 1.64 million nonprofit organizations in the United States, and in 2006, employees of nonprofit organizations accounted for 8.1 percent of wages paid in the U.S. Below are profiles of just six of the many Western alumni who have chosen careers that make a difference – careers in the nonprofit field.

Sue White ’86

When Sue White was a student more than 20 years ago, one of her professors wrote a comment across a returned paper – “You have the spirit to move people.” She has never forgotten that.

Today, as the vice president of operations/chief operations officer for the YMCA in Arlington, Texas, she hopes that comment is still true.

When Sue earned her leisure management degree, she thought she wanted to work in a corporation’s wellness program, even though she was completing an internship with the local YMCA. One interview with a corporation told her that the YMCA was really where she wanted to be, and she has had a career with the nonprofit organization since she graduated.

“When you’re in a nonprofit, you’re tied to a mission and you love it,” she said. “My personal mission aligns with the YMCA. I like being in an organization where you really do change lives.”

Lisa (Salmons) Umphrey ’87 & ’92

Lisa Umphrey not only works for a nonprofit company, but the mission of her employer is to help other nonprofit organizations.

She works for Meliora Partners, Inc., out of Marshalltown, Iowa. Five out of the seven company employees travel full time, training and consulting with mostly Community Action Agencies across the country. Lisa, who works out of her home, is the travel coordinator for the company in addition to performing some consulting for the company. “The more you work with them (Community Action Agencies), the more you see the good work they do and the work they do with families,” she said.

Although she didn’t plan it that way, Lisa has worked for nonprofits throughout her career. When she graduated with an executive secretary degree in 1987, she began working full time for Western, eventually for President Dr. Janet Gorman McCarthy, until 1999.

John Fabsits ’04

If you ask John Fabsits what he does in his position as senior district executive for the Great Rivers Council of the Boy Scouts of America, his response is typical of someone working in the nonprofit field: “What don’t I do?” But he quickly adds that the varied job duties, which include serving as Cub Scout summer camp director at Camp Thunderbird, are what makes the job enjoyable.

John became a Cub Scout when he was eight years old and earned the Eagle Scout award when he was 15. He has worked for the council in mid-Missouri since 2005.

“It’s a profession with a purpose. I know that what I’m doing is providing experiences for youth,” he says. John loves when he hears about a scout who chose a career because of a merit badge he earned as a youth, but his greatest reward is when he sees a scout become an Eagle.

“There is a lot of pride there. The Eagle Scout Award is the only thing from your youth you keep on your résumé.”

Alicia Falter ’07

If you knew Alicia Falter when she was a student at Western, you may have guessed she would have pursued a career in the nonprofit field. Not only would her major have provided a clue, but also her co-curricular activities. The social work major works for the Full Employment Council in Kansas City, Mo., helping urban youth find jobs or further their education.

At Western, Alicia was involved in the social work student organization, the campus activities board and the student Habitat for Humanity group. “I had a great experience. The extra-curricular activities helped me in my job because they made me willing to take the lead on projects.”

And why did she choose the nonprofit field? “It’s great job satisfaction. I like helping people,” she said. “I feel like I accomplished something at the end of the day.”

Alumni making a DIFFERENCE, not a PROFIT

Jean ’73, and Bill ’74, Brown

Whether it’s funding cycles, grant applications, being called out at all hours, or helping those in need, Jean and Bill Brown have seen firsthand every facet of what it’s like to work for a nonprofit agency. They have both worked for nonprofits their entire careers.

Bill, who has a bachelor’s degree in psychology from Western and a master’s from West Virginia University, has worked for Family Guidance Center for 31 years and has been the supervisor of the crisis intervention services for the past 11.

“I like that I’ve had a lot of variety,” Bill said, who even had a program segment on mental health issues on KQ2, a local television station, for five years.

Jean, who has a bachelor’s in social work from Western and a master’s from West Virginia University, worked for Family Guidance Center for 22 years and has been the director of the YWCA in St. Joseph since 1995. She received the Distinguished Alumni Award from the Alumni Association in 1989.

Jean said she has always enjoyed developing programs to meet people’s needs. In the early 1980s, she helped develop a sex education program where the parent and child were taught together, and it brought her national attention. That program was the first of its kind in the country, and she was interviewed on 20/20, Good Morning America and many more programs. She trained other teachers, and the program is now being used all over the United States.

The couple said there have been a lot of challenges throughout their nonprofit careers, including periods of low funding and great demands on their time as they raised their two children, Abby ’02 and Adam ’06.

“We see a lot of pain, a lot of hurt,” Jean said. “There’s always more work that can be done.”

“You get into this (field) wanting to help people, and then you are faced with realities. But you can still find some of that vision in nonprofits,” Bill said. “You get to help a broad spectrum of people in need.”

As a student, Teri White ’01, had planned to earn a bachelor’s degree in criminal justice with a legal studies emphasis and find a job as a paralegal, but her professors had other ideas. They saw her potential, she says, and encouraged her to think about law school.

Teri graduated at the top of her class at the University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law and went to work for the law firm of Shook, Hardy and Bacon in Kansas City, Mo. Today she works in the Products Liability Defense’s tobacco unit.

“Taking legal studies here really does prepare you for law school,” she says. “It’s a great advantage. My ranking in law school had a lot to do with the legal studies program at Western.”

This past fall, when Teri returned to Western to teach an evening class she was surprised at how nervous she felt on the first day of class. “I was scared before the first class and didn’t even think about enjoying it, but as I drove home afterwards I thought, ‘Wow, I really loved that.’”

Now she plans to encourage the students in her class, just as her professors did for her. Some of her students have a lot of responsibilities, such as children or a full-time job, but Teri hopes she can be a role model for those who think they can’t reach their goals.

She was married with a child when she transferred to Western and then had another baby as a student. While she was in law school, her third child was born.

“You just have to keep giving it everything you’ve got. Know who you are and know you’re capable of doing a lot more than people think you can do.”

Potter Hall potter

Art students had an opportunity to watch a professional artist at work up close this summer when Robert Wiedmaier ’75, set up a temporary studio in Potter Hall. He recently moved to the Kansas City area and was looking for a new studio when Jim Estes, professor of art, offered him a room next to the ceramics studio until he found what he needed.

“It’s been enjoyable. I like interacting with the students,” Robert said. “It’s nice to work in a different environment than you’re used to because it makes you look at things differently.”

He said he’s been creating pieces so long that it was interesting when students would ask him about his particular technique, something he usually doesn’t have to think about.

Jim noted that Robert uses the same clay, glazes and equipment as students use in the ceramics classes here, so when the students see Robert’s creations, they realize that it’s not the materials that make the beautiful finished product, but skill. “Advanced students have really benefited from seeing him work. They are able to see the attention to detail and the craftsmanship, and they see what really good work is.”

When Robert was an art student, the ceramics studio was in an old house on the east side of campus and Potter Hall was a lot smaller. But one thing was the same when he returned this summer – Jim was still teaching.

The artist estimates that he makes 800-1,000 pieces per year, which he sells at art fairs all over the country. Each piece takes several weeks to complete.

“It’s a great experience for the students to see someone who has made a livelihood out of their art,” Jim said. “The students appreciate his work even more when they realize what it takes to make a living at it. It’s a tough profession.”

Here’s lots of excitement at Western lately, with construction ongoing and new things popping up all over campus! Just this fall, new visitor-side bleachers were added to Spratt Memorial Stadium, a new fountain was installed in a campus pond (the first of three), a sculpture was unveiled by Potter Hall and a new entrance sign was installed at the Faraon Street entrance. Remington Hall will open for classes this month, construction continues on the recreational facility for Western and the Kansas City Chiefs summer training camp and the renovation of Agenstein Hall has begun.
