Missouri Western State University is an equal opportunity institution.

A Note from the Editor

Dear Friends,
To say working on this issue was exciting is an understatement! Western becoming a university is a historic and proud event in our history and the history of St. Joseph, and our staff wanted to make sure we gave justice to the honor. To that end, we devoted six pages in the center and the back cover to our history, our present and our celebration of university designation.

I had a great time poring over old yearbooks, newspapers, microfiche files, and Frances Flanagan’s book of our history to learn about our 90 years, but I had even more fun visiting with alumni. I interviewed graduates from each decade of our institution back to the 1930s, and I think I could have devoted most of the magazine to their wonderful stories!

From all my interviews, I realized that the Junior College was a very special place. With all the classes meeting in just one building, students and faculty became a small, close knit community. However, even though classes and buildings were quite a bit more spread out, alumni from the four-year college have many heartwarming memories, also. Many have the added benefit of close friendships between roommates and suitemates.

Not surprisingly, I heard the same theme echoed over and over, no matter who I spoke with, no matter what year they graduated: they all experienced caring faculty and staff and a high quality educational experience. And of course, a lot commented on how many more trees are on campus today compared to Western’s early days (600)!

On a side note, I have also been working on another project where we are featuring some of our outstanding alumni on brochures, web pages and in department photographs. Throughout the summer, I spoke with or corresponded through email with almost 200 alumni, and it was a wonderful experience! Again, more great stories.

But I gained a lot more than just hearing great stories. I came away from the project with a new appreciation of Western and what it offers to the community, the region and beyond. Western is turning out successful alumni that are making a difference in work places across the nation. I was impressed with their success stories, and it made me prouder still of Western.

In this year that we became a university, learning about the success of our alumni merely affirmed the fact that we have truly earned that designation.

Sincerely,
Diane Holtz

Western rolls out the red carpet at Experience Western! Discover the Treasure

In April, Western opened its doors to the community with “Experience Western! Discover the Treasure,” a day of fun and informative activities, and the community responded in a big way. Over 1,500 visitors of all ages joined in the fun and took advantage of the free activities.

Glitter and glue, face paint and beads, musical instruments, a “mine shaft,” a MASH tent and hundreds of children and their parents were all part of the Treasure Island children’s area of Experience Western! At times throughout the day, it was difficult for visitors to wend their way around clowns, balloons, children and activities.

Jeanne Modlin, ’85, and her husband, John, brought four of their children to the event because it looked like there would be a lot of fun activities for them to do. “They had a ball. There was something there for all of them,” she said.

The Modlins also visited the Fulkerson Center, where there were more than 60 displays and services from all academic departments and several community groups.

Jeanne said she liked having her children come out and learn about her alma mater. “It was interesting learning about the departments and what Missouri Western has to offer,” she said. “Everyone was very helpful and willing to talk about their departments. I hope they do it (Experience Western!) again. It was a good way for families to see the college.”

The day also included a car show with approximately 100 cars, superlative student entertainment, presentations and displays of student research.

“Campus support was outstanding, as almost every department had a role in Experience Western!,” said Kristy Hill, ’95, director of public relations and marketing and coordinator of the event. “The turnout from the community was just as we had hoped. We were pleased that so many people from the area joined in on the fun.”

“Dr. Arnold has worked tirelessly for the good of students and Missouri Western for the past three years. He is highly regarded in our profession,” said Dr. James Scanlon, Western’s president.

Eureka College, alma mater of President Ronald Reagan, is a private liberal arts college with an enrollment of more than 500 students.

“During his time here, he has helped Western to emerge as a university well focused on learning outcomes for students, professional development and recognition for faculty, and service to the regional and professional communities,” said Dr. Scanlon. “We wish him every success as president of Eureka College.”

They’re not “dormitories” anymore. That’s the word from Residential Life Director Michael Speros, as he spoke about the new Living and Learning Center, Western’s $17 million, 400-bed residence hall that opened this fall, featuring semi-suite double and single rooms with Internet and cable access; and lounges, study areas and kitchenettes on each floor.

The center offers students the opportunity to live with others who share their academic interests, or in Learning Communities. In a Learning Community, up to 25 students take three classes together, and the faculty in those classes coordinate curriculum and assignments. There are currently 13 Learning Communities offered at Western, three in the new hall.

Michael said the new hall is set up almost entirely as “lifestyle housing,” consisting of a freshman floor, upperclass floor, leadership/service floor, where students will meet business people from the community; or wellness floor, where students commit to a healthy lifestyle. He noted that the five other residence halls offer lifestyle and interest housing, also.

“Everybody’s different,” Michael said. “That’s the fun of it. You should be able to find a niche where you can be comfortable. That’s what lifestyle floors are all about – for students to be happy and successful.”

Western’s newest residence hall, the Living and Learning Center, opened this fall, and students settled in quickly. The 400-bed hall is located south of Vaselakos Hall.

Western League for Excellence Update

This spring, the Foundation kicked off the Western League for Excellence, a society to honor those who donate unrestricted funds of $100 or more to the Foundation with the intent to support Western annually.

To date, the League boasts of over 200 charter members, and over $93,000 has been raised.

Pete and Staci Gray were the first members of the Founder’s Circle, which denotes an annual donation of $5,000 or more. Michael DePriest and his wife Barbara Braznelli were the first lifetime members, which means their unrestricted gift will be endowed.

“Membership in the League is a great way for people to say, ‘I’m committed to Western and its students. I’m in it for the long haul,’” said Jerry Pickman, ’85, director of development.

He said the unrestricted funds give students opportunities such as attending conferences, traveling abroad, and attending special programs.

Those who donate to the League through Dec. 31 will be considered charter members.

Dr. Christopher Shove has a dream. The executive director of the Western Institute wants to see a technology incubator built on Western’s campus to create opportunities for Western students and faculty to transform research into commercial technological products.

The first step toward that dream was reached when the Institute received a $20,000 grant from the Economic Development Administration in Washington, DC to study the feasibility of building the incubator, which Chris calls the Venture Center.

Chris said the grant will pay for Western students to conduct market analyses and determine if venture capital is available for funding. They will also study the best location on campus and building size.

If the study concludes that the incubator is feasible, the Institute will apply for a federal grant to fund the construction of the Center and a grant to pay for its staffing.

“The Venture Center fits perfectly with the purpose of the Western Institute,” said Chris. “The Institute is already helping students, faculty and area businesses develop new technology on products.”

He noted that St. Joseph matches several criteria that determines if a location is right for a science and technology incubator, such as being within 50 miles of an international airport, having a good supply of technological workers, and having other research and development activities in the area.

The Venture Center is actually just the first step of Chris’ long-range vision: he envisions the Center being part of a Science and Technology Village on campus, a cutting-edge concept which could include research centers, retail shops, apartments, a conference facility and restaurants.

Late at night and on weekends, if you happen to pass by the Western Institute’s Survey Research Lab or the Geographic Information Systems Lab on the second floor of Leah Spratt Hall, you’ll see faculty and students entering data, setting up focus groups and conducting research. They are working for regional businesses and organizations that have secured contracts through one of the Institute’s research centers.

Dr. Chris Shove, executive director of the Western Institute, said he expects the number of projects to increase because four new research centers were formed last spring.

They include Arts and Culture, directed by Dr. Mark Mikkelsen, associate professor of philosophy; Business and Economics, Dr. Shiva Nandan, associate professor of business; Health and Wellness, Dr. Evelyn Brooks, associate professor of nursing; and Life Sciences, Dr. Todd Eckdahl, professor of biology.

“It’s wonderful applied learning for students. These are real projects with real responsibilities,” said Chris. “It’s an excellent foundation for graduate programs.”

You gotta go where the job takes you, and when Ralph Hiller, '77, was transferred from St. Joseph to California, the nontraditional student had to move, even though he only needed 12 more hours to earn his degree. However, Western was willing to work with him, he said, and allowed him to transfer credits for classes he took in California to earn his degree from Western.

“Their were very nice to me. I have a real special place in my heart for them,” he said of the staff.

Even though he took just a couple evening classes each semester, he said he has a lot of great memories of his years at Western.

“I wanted to establish something for students who were like me, who wanted to get a degree to help themselves,” Ralph said.

When Ralph visited Western this summer, he had the opportunity to meet with two recipients of his scholarships - a single mother, and a father who had been recently laid off from his job.

“Those are the types of people I want to help. They are struggling to get through and better themselves. It’s really rewarding to help them.”
Students see no tuition increase for second year

Good news for students and parents! For the second year in a row, Western’s Board of Regents voted not to increase tuition. The in-state tuition per credit hour remained $146 for in-state students and $267 for out-of-state students.

“Western is committed to putting our students first,” said Dr. James Scanlon, Western’s president. “When Western makes any decision, its first consideration is how it impacts students. The decision not to increase tuition is based on that same rationale.”

Across the state, the average tuition increase was about four percent.

“Western is committed to ensuring quality education at the best value possible - affordable excellence,” said Dr. Scanlon.

“That is really exciting; I am ecstatic,” said Kyler Keith, a recreation/sports management major from St. Joseph. “With Western becoming a university, everyone expected tuition to increase.”

Dr. Scanlon noted that this will be the third year in a row that students will pay the same core tuition rate.

Accessories add to pomp of ceremonies

Thanks to the generosity of Dr. Joseph Friedman, ’39, new ceremonial accessories - a mace, a presidential medallion and banners - were introduced at the formal university designation celebration Aug. 31, and will now be used at all formal university events such as academic convocations and commencements.

The mace, almost four feet tall, is topped by the university’s newly designed seal, and Griffon and clock tower etchings are engraved on bronze plates. Five plates on the staff contain the former names of the institution: St. Joseph Junior College, Missouri Western Junior College, Missouri Western College, Missouri Western State College, and Missouri Western State University.

A presidential medallion contains the seal and the university’s six values. Six processionai banners were also purchased.

Dr. Virenda Varma (left), chair of the engineering technology department, poses by the department’s new “teachable art” sculpture. The sculpture is designed to teach construction technology students about steel construction.

As a college student, Steve Koenig developed a love of the stock market and an interest in trading, and he has pursued that passion for 19 years.

Steve, the managing director of J.P. Morgan’s Latin America Derivative Trading Business in New York City, wanted to give a Western student an opportunity to develop that same passion, so he recently established the Koenig Family Scholarship with two goals in mind: to aid student athletes who are finance or economics majors, and to honor his grandparents, Sidney and Claire Koenig.

“I have a lot of very fond memories of college. I had a great education and I have a great respect for Missouri Western,” said Steve.

Steve, a native of New Jersey, came to Western to play football in 1982. The marketing major was a student athlete for four years at Western, and later earned a bachelor’s degree in New York.

Steve said he has come back for several football games over the years, and he always hooks up with former teammate Jerry Partridge, ’86, now Griffon head football coach.

Community service was part of the Griffon Edge new student orientation program for the second year. Approximately 800 students volunteered for Habitat for Humanity throughout the community on the last day of the orientation.

Plan wisely and invest in Western

Charitable estate planning, also known as planned giving, may allow you to take advantage of the benefits offered to you while providing a future gift to the Missouri Western State University Foundation.

For example, Charitable Remainder Trusts are often thought to be an excellent estate planning option, especially if you are among the many people trapped in the ownership of low yield appreciated stocks or other property that has grown in value. The capital gains tax that you will experience if you sell the appreciated assets makes it difficult to sell the asset and invest in something providing a better annual yield.

These trusts may give you the opportunity to increase your annual spendable income by increasing your annual yield, reducing your income tax obligation, reducing any federal estate tax liability, and avoiding the capital gains tax associated with the sale of the property. These potential benefits have caused the use of Charitable Remainder Trust to grow in popularity.

At the May commencement ceremony, Geraldine “Jerry” Benitz received a bachelor of science degree in history. About five weeks earlier, she observed her 80th birthday.

“I have enjoyed it tremendously,” Jerry said of the journey to her degree. “It was easy for me. I want to express my thanks and gratitude to everyone on the campus.”

She said it was fun being around the traditional students. “It keeps me younger.”

And in the four years she commuted from Stewartsville, Mo. for class, she only missed one day.

How does it feel to get the degree finally? “Great. It was a goal of mine. It was a tribute to my parents. I did it, folks.”

New theatre/video degree

The communication studies and theatre department established a new bachelor of science degree in Theatre/Video, an integrated program that blends the two disciplines. The program began this fall, along with the opening of a computer lab with nonlinear editing and sound production software, and a media production lab.

“It will allow us to better prepare students who desire employment in the media arts production areas of theatre performance, technical entertainment production and filmmaking,” said Deny Staggs, assistant professor of theatre.

He said the new degree program offers three “tracks” - performance, directing, and technical, and students will choose two for their emphasis.

“We’ll be working with the latest technology to prepare students for the latest technological challenges,” Deny said.

Each One Teach One: Students reach out to teach

Each One Teach One, a mentoring program where Western students mentor middle school students, kicked off last spring and will expand this fall. The program is the brainchild of Lavell Rucker, ‘03, social worker for the St. Joseph School District, and Tay Triggs, minority achievement coordinator at Western.

Tay said an advantage of having college students as mentors is that the younger students now have a role model in their lives who is going to college.

“There’s a passion at Missouri Western to help out and mentor,” said Tay. “There are plenty of students who want to have a child to guide.”

Fulkerson Center opens!

Sen. Christopher “Kit” Bond was the featured speaker at a banquet in March to celebrate the opening of the Fulkerson Center, a 500-seat banquet and conference facility on campus named for Marie Fulkerson and her late husband, Lyman.

“The Center is a true partnership between the community and the college, and it will benefit both,” said Sen. Bond. “The community that invests in higher education reaps the benefits for its people and its economy.”

Athletics Hall of Fame Class of 2005

Four athletes and the 1975 football team were inducted into Western’s Athletic Hall of Fame 2005 class Sept. 18:

Mark Bradley, ’92, played three seasons for the men’s basketball team from 1989-1992, leading the Griffons to three straight trips to the national tournament. Mark averaged 12 points and seven rebounds per game and currently ranks sixth in career field goal percentage at Western. He was team captain for three years.

Tim Boender, ’84, was a three-year letterwinner on the defensive line for the football team from 1981-1983. He was a NAIA second team All-America selection following the 1983 season, and earned CSIC and NAIA District 16 accolades during his time as Western.

Scott Graham, ’78, was a four-year letterwinner for the football team from 1974-1977. He was team captain his sophomore year, and was a top figure of the Griffon offensive line that posted two bowl victories during his career.

Blake Schreck, ’78, was a four-year letterwinner for the baseball team from 1974-1978. He earned NAIA All-America, All-Region and All-District honors following his senior season. He was a member of the NAIA World Series All-Tournament Team and ended his career as a member of the NAIA National Traveling Team. His 634 career at-bats and 15 triples both rank second on the career lists at Western.

The 1975 football season was the first winning season in Western history, going 8-3-1, a school record for victories until 2004. That team made Western’s first postseason appearance and finished the season ranked 14th in the nation. At one time during the season, it was ranked as high as seventh.
The 2005 spring sports were ones to remember! The softball team set the Western record for wins in a season, going 48-20 and advancing to the NCAA Division II national tournament. The Griffons went 1-2 at the national tournament, held in Emporia, Kan.

The golf team finished the season in third place in the MIAA standings, but sent its number one golfer to the NCAA Division II national championships. Western junior Brice Garnett won medalist honors at the regional tournament and placed fourth at the nationals. It was the highest finish ever for a Western athlete in any event since Western joined the NCAA in 1989.

The baseball team went 33-22 overall and set a school record for MIAA wins with a 21-10 mark in league play. Western finished third in the league standings, its highest ever finish since joining the MIAA in 1989. Western had five players earn All-MIAA accolades.

The Griffon tennis team went 12-14, the most wins during one year for the program in four seasons. The Griffons picked up wins over NCAA Division II members Nebraska-Omaha and South Dakota.

For the love of the Long-time athletic trainer held in high regard

Former Griffon football player Matt Gragg, ’97, said he’ll never forget the time his teammate had separated his shoulder during a game and was writhing in pain on the ground. Myron Unzicker calmly walked over to the injured player, set him upright, put his feet on the player’s side, then pulled, turned and reset his arm.

It was just another day on the job for Myron, Western’s athletic trainer who has been wrapping, rubbing and rehabilitating athletes since he came to Western in 1983.

“Myron was the calmest person I’ve ever seen around injuries,” Matt said. “I’ve seen him calm down grown men with broken fingers pointing in directions you didn’t think possible. He has this calming effect that makes the players feel confident that their injury will heal.”

Senior Andre Burns, a Griffon cornerback, can relate to that. He says fellow players jibe Myron about his “walk.” “When someone gets injured, Myron has this walk. It’s just a nice casual walk; he doesn’t run over. But he’ll get you taken care of.”

Kate (Pierson) Esely, ’00, a fellow athletic trainer who worked under Myron as a student, agreed. “Myron and I work very well together because he’s laid back and I’m a go-getter. He doesn’t get excited about much of anything.”

It’s hard to go to a sports event at Western and not see Myron. He or a member of his staff try to attend every athletic event and the majority of practices.

“When people think of athletic trainers, they usually think of two things – taping ankles and carrying water,” said Myron. But today’s trainers also work on rehabilitation after surgery, conditioning, and the athletes’ nutrition, lifestyles, and medical history.

“The players always wanted to get taped by Myron, because of his skill, and there was always a line,” said Matt, recalling his football days at Western. “Usually the upperclassmen were up front, but if you got in to him early enough, he’d square you away.”

Andre said in that regard, things haven’t changed since Matt played. Andre, who recovered from two pulled hamstrings last season, is usually one of the first in line for Myron’s taping skills before football practices.

Myron said the best part of his job is getting to know the students and working closely with them. “You have to be a people person. We see kids at their highs and at their lows and you have to learn how to read them,” he said.

“How kids react after a big win is different than how they react when you tell them they can’t play anymore. You get tears at both ends.”

“But I like my job. Every day is different. You never know what’s going to happen at a practice or a game.”

Which is probably exactly what that linebacker was thinking the day Myron gave Matt that unforgettable memory.
Several alums have turned their love of sports into successful careers.

Cory Burnett, ’98, said he always knew he wanted to have a career with a professional sports team, and when he found out he needed an internship as a recreation administration major, he sent a resume to “every team, every sport - pro, semi-pro, minor or major.”

His diligence paid off. He was hired as an unpaid summer intern for the Indiana Pacers in 1998, and has worked full time in the Pacers’ front office since 1999. His main responsibility is working with the team’s scouts.

“I really attribute getting the job to Missouri Western. They encouraged internships so you’d get a feel for what you wanted to do.”

And the best part about his job? “I go to almost every game and get to meet a lot of ballplayers and celebrities.”

Meeting a lot of professional athletes and coaches is what makes her job interesting and fun, also, said Gini Fite, ’99 and ’01. Gini, a physical therapy assistant and athletic trainer in Overland Park, Kan., said the company she works for provides athletic trainers for sporting events and national tournaments throughout the country.

“I’ve even met my favorite basketball player of all time two times – Danny Manning (former University of Kansas standout and NBA player).”

Gini credits her four years of experience as a student athletic trainer at Western with helping her land her current job. Her long hours in the training room paid off with an athletic trainer certificate, which was required for her position.

“I love sports, but was never good enough to make the team. So this was a way to be involved in sports.”

David Lang, ’85 and ’96, earned his first degree at Western in business administration, but had always wanted a sports-related career.

For several years after college he held positions as a sports information director, but when he was laid off in 1994, he decided to return to his alma mater to pursue a recreation management degree.

Since April of this year, David has been the director of admissions at “the most historic racetrack in the world” – Churchill Downs, home of the Kentucky Derby.

“I like the big crowds. I love it when we’re running,” he said. “We had a great time at the Kentucky Derby.”

Ironically, in this position he said he uses his accounting skills more than he ever has, but “it doesn’t feel like accounting.”

Did you know?

Twelve alumni are on the coaching and administrative staff of Western’s athletic department!
The year is 1915. Pluto is photographed for the first time, but is not recognized as a planet. Les Paul, the inventor of the electric guitar, is born. NACA, predecessor to NASA, is founded, and an automobile speed record is set at 102.6 mph.

Meanwhile, in St. Joseph, Mo., 35 students enrolled at the new St. Joseph Junior College, housed in Central High School with courses taught by the high school teachers. It would be 10 years before the college had a building to call its own, and eight years after that before the college moved to the “concrete campus” at 10th and Edmond.

The year is 1969. Pluto has been officially named a planet for almost 40 years. The Beatles, who loved the electric guitar, gave their last public performance together. Astronauts in Apollo 11 walk on the moon, and the automobile speed record is 622.287 mph.

Meanwhile, in St. Joseph, 2,536 students enrolled on a 390-acre campus consisting of three buildings and no trees at the four-year Missouri Western College. The college is a “commuter campus,” as there are no residence halls for students; and most people outside of northwest Missouri have never heard of Missouri Western.

The education department is the first in the nation to offer a new teacher candidate experience program. Every classroom is equipped with a chalkboard, and those students with typewriters can earn extra money typing papers for their classmates.

In 2005, scientists are questioning if Pluto really is a planet. The Beatles never got back together, even for one concert. Astronauts are living in space stations, and space shuttles can be used for more than one mission. Automobile land speed records are constantly being broken, but are well over 880 mph.

Meanwhile, in St. Joseph, more than 5,000 students enrolled on the 700-plus acre campus of Missouri Western State University in the fall. There are 18 buildings, 600 trees and about 1,400 students living on campus, 400 of them in the newly opened Living and Learning Center.

Every classroom has state-of-the-art technology, and computer labs can be found all over campus. There is Internet access in every residential room. The university is recognized nationally for several of its programs, including the program for teacher candidates. A brand new banquet and conference facility graces the campus.

Ask any alumnus and they’ll surely tell you: A lot may have changed in the 90 years between “Junior College” and “University,” but the tradition of high quality academics and caring faculty and staff who put students first has never wavered at St. Joseph’s higher education institution.

“Missouri Western has exemplified such an incredible standard for higher learning, the university status is well deserved,” said Rachael Needham, ’02. “The professors take the time to meet with students and help them.”

High quality academics and high achieving students are some of the characteristics that qualified Western for university status, Gov. Matt Blunt told the audience at the ceremonial university bill signing in March. Those characteristics, long recognized by alumni, are now becoming known not only statewide, but nationally.

Two years ago, for example, the university was one of only 12 institutions across the country chosen to develop a model for improving students’ first year of college. It was chosen because of the quality of its current first-year programs for students, such as the Griffon Edge orientation program and College 101 and learning communities, a new trend in colleges and universities where groups of students take classes together, study together and sometimes live on the same floor in the residence halls.

“The biggest things to happen to St. Joseph were when they started the college and when it became a four-year college,” said Herb Iffert, ’35. “And university status is wonderful. It’s just great.”

“I’m really proud that it’s a university,” said Tegwin Pulley, ’63. “It’s a big step up from the concrete campus.”

No one knows for certain what the future holds. We can guess that the remaining two Beatles will never perform together again. Pluto may become a nonplanet again, and space may become the next tourist destination. And who knows how fast automobiles will go?

But for Missouri Western State University, one thing is certain: it will continue the tradition of outstanding academics, high achieving students and caring faculty.

“If the Junior College had not been here, I might not have even gone to college.”
Joe Mazur, ’58

“Good heavens. It was wide open country, the wind was blowing and the trees were the size of your thumb.”
Ron Auxier, ’73

“From the time I was a student to today, things are moving in the right direction. It (the university) is one of the areas in the community that is continually striving to get better.”
Bryan Seiter, ’98
During his tenure as president, Dr. Looney oversaw the construction of 12 buildings, including three residence halls, and the football stadium, and the emergence of a four-year high quality academic institution. He withstood many conflicts and differences of opinion about the direction of the new college throughout his tenure, but at the end of his presidency, he had helped to lay a strong foundation for an outstanding four-year college.

Dr. Murphy also garnered the A+ program for Western, and initiated Access Plus, a student services program.

Under Dr. Scanlon’s presidency, a new residence hall, residential commons building, and a banquet and conference facility was built. The cafeteria and several student spaces were remodeled.

Dr. Scanlon instituted a five-year strategic plan in 2002, with strong emphasis on applied learning, community service and academic quality. Several new programs have also been initiated, such as the American Democracy Project, Foundations of Excellence™ in the first year, and Learning Communities.

And, of course, Western became a university!
The St. Joseph School District’s board had determined that, if at least 20 students showed an interest, classes identical to the University of Missouri courses for the first year of college would be offered at Central High School. Within two weeks, more than 30 students had indicated their intention to attend, and the St. Joseph Junior College was born. The first day of classes was Sept. 20 with 35 students.

IN A LEAGUE OF THEIR OWN

Although the college began as a mere extension of the high school, Junior College students very shortly established their own identity. Within two years, the students had their own yearbook and newspaper, and a Griffon mascot that has endured to this day.

When it was 10 years old, the Junior College moved out of the high school and into its own building - the old Everett School at 14th and Olive. Eight years later, the college relocated to 10th and Edmond, where it remained until 1969.

HARD TIMES

College tuition was never easy to come by, but when the depression arrived in 1929 and lasted for several years, it became even more difficult. Herb Iffert, ’35, from Wathena, Kan., paid his tuition by working almost 40 hours a week at Miller’s Drug Store in Wathena. He said his parents encouraged him to attend college, but they didn’t have the means to help him pay for it. “If I was going to get anyplace, I knew I had to get an education. But I wouldn’t have been able to go to school if it hadn’t been close by.”

“HALCYON DAYS IN SPITE OF A TERRIBLE WAR”

The country had barely recovered from the Great Depression before World War II intruded, definitely changing the makeup of the college. George Hopkins, ’46, graduated from high school when he was 16 and started at the Junior College in 1944 since he was too young to be drafted. That year, the Griffon News reported an enrollment of 169 women and 69 men, but George said “they were taking boys right and left” as the year went on. “I was the only boy in the school play. I thought I was in hog heaven.”

George said he remembers having a lot of fun at the Junior College - the dances, the basketball games, cutting class to play ping pong and his election as student body president. “They were halcyon days in spite of the terrible war,” he said.
HAPPY DAYS ARE HERE AGAIN

“By 1946, the war and the Great Depression were all behind us,” said Bill Foddy, ’48. “The whole country was feeling good.”

Bonnie Hartigan started at the Junior College in 1948 and was thrilled to be attending with all her high school idols who had returned from the war. “It was intriguing to go to the Junior College in those years. All the guys who had been in the service were back in college.”

Her favorite things to do as a student were attend basketball games and dances in the old church building across the street from the Junior College.

The end of the Korean War again brought an influx of veterans to the Junior College, according to Joe Mazur, ’58 and Tom Kalin, ’55. Tom said there were several veterans in his physics class who kept the professor busy just trying to maintain order. One rigged up a bell in the back room that he could ring from his desk, which kept the professor continually confounded and running to the back room. “But I really did learn a lot in that class,” Tom said. “The professors looked at me and said, ‘that guy is going to need some extra help,’ and I received an excellent education.”

Tegwin Pulley, ’63, said the biggest benefits of the Junior College when she was a student were the small class sizes and good teachers who knew their subjects.

She said that whenever she went to the grotto student center between classes (slipping and sliding and barely making it in the winter on the icy streets), you could sit with anyone, because everyone was friendly to each other. “It was a pleasant, welcoming environment,” she added.

A TIME OF TURMOIL

And then came the turbulent late sixties, which Dr. Margaret King, ’73, called “an interesting time to be a college student.”

She joined a group of fellow students from Frank Popplewell’s political science class who were political activists.

In 1968, the group attended the Democratic National Convention in Chicago. Margaret said while they were there, they were gathered in a park with several other college-aged students, and they were gassed by the police.

She said that incident had a huge effect on the Junior College students who were there. “We sort of dropped out of politics. I became serious and changed my major from political science to biology. It was really strange times.”

A TIME OF VISION

Although the Junior College students were not immune to the turbulent sixties, exciting things were happening locally that changed the course of the Junior College.
MWSU - Now what? FAQs

Western's university designation has raised a lot of questions among alumni and friends of Western, and we hope this helps answer some of those questions!

• Can I get a new diploma that says “university” now?
  Yes. Alumni may contact the Alumni Services Office to request a duplicate “university” diploma, but they will not be produced until after the December commencement. Cost is $20. Please pick up an application in the alumni services office or download it online at www.missouriwestern.edu.

• Will tuition increase now that Western is a university?
  No. At their May meeting, the Board of Regents voted not to increase the tuition for the 2005-2006 academic year. This is the third year in a row that tuition has remained the same.

• What about graduate programs?
  According to Dr. James Scanlon, Western’s president, within the next two to five years, Western plans to develop master’s degrees programs, graduate certificate programs and research programs tied directly to the needs of business and industry in the region. The graduate programs will most likely be in the fields of health sciences, life sciences and engineering technology.

• How will Western pay for the expense of switching to a university?
  The Western Foundation has generously agreed to meet the modest expenses of the change, such as signage around campus and the establishment of a new Internet domain. Offices plan to use the “college” stationery before purchasing new.

• Will university status change enrollment?
  “We are interested in controlled growth and enrollment,” said Dr. Scanlon. “We hope to grow our enrollment, but we do not have a target enrollment set.”

• Will state funding change?
  University status will have no direct effect on state funding.

Years of talking about a four-year college came to fruition in 1965 when state legislators approved a bill to expand the Junior College to a four-year college, and 130 acres on Frederick Blvd. were purchased for that purpose.

That same year, voters approved the Missouri Western Junior College District, and the name was changed to Missouri Western Junior College.

However, several visionaries thought the purchased land wasn’t big enough for the college they had in mind, and they began pushing for purchase of 390 acres east of I-29. After much local contention, that land was purchased in 1966, the same year voters passed a bond issue to build three buildings on the new campus.

“We were aghast when they decided to move it out there,” Bonnie Hartigan said of the larger acreage purchase. “But today, I’m glad someone had the vision to move it. It is now a beautiful site.”

From sharing rooms with high school students, to an old elementary school, to a “concrete campus,” to several hundred acres; from a junior college to a four-year college, to a university; from 35 students to 5,000-plus; the Junior College laid the foundation for the jewel of St. Joseph - Missouri Western State University.
The value of an education at Missouri Western is priceless - of course, as an alum, you already know that. I have talked with a lot of alumni who continue to boast about the education that they received at Western and how much they have grown to appreciate it long after they leave campus. Whether they got their start at Saint Joseph Junior College or Missouri Western State College, alumni have gone on to accomplish great things - from being presidents of major banks and financial institutions, to owning their own business, to raising little “Griffons.” No matter where the alumni reside today, one message remains the same - they are proud of where they came from and proud of Missouri Western for what it has become: Missouri Western State University!

The campus is abuzz with the news about Western gaining university designation.

One group of alumni who are particularly excited about the university designation is the Alumni Association Board of Directors.

The Alumni Board has continued its work under the Alumni Services office to engage alumni and create more opportunities for involvement in the life of Western. The alumni committees this year have been reorganized to develop engagement and involvement activities (see box).

All alumni are invited and encouraged to become involved with the Association by serving on a committee, hosting an alumni event, mentoring a student or simply attending an alumni event. The opportunities are endless!

Alumni Committees
The Alumni Association has established new committees, and all alumni are invited to join!

Student Outreach
Student scholarships, mentoring students, and more.

Events and Involvement
Help plan special events, Homecoming, service projects, social activities, etc.

Membership and Merchandising
Promote and create membership and benefits program, explore merchandise opportunities.

Western Magazine Fall 2005
Dear MWSU alumni, families, and friends,

Homecoming. The ultimate purpose of this annual event is to give folks an opportunity to “come home” to reminisce on past experiences and to live in the present of their alma mater. It’s a time for everyone involved with Missouri Western, young and old, to have a good time and reflect on the past and the present. This year is particularly exciting as we are celebrating the great accomplishment of making Missouri Western a University!

Homecoming should be a spectacular event with a strong emphasis on alumni. This is a time for alumni to embrace current students and their families and begin a new bond with each of them. Without alumni, we may never have an accurate account of the past triumphs and tribulations of this fine institution. These memories are held with the graduates. As alumni, we should be like an extended family to current students and their families.

I hope that the alumni will be doing a much better job with these tasks. You will see for the first time this year a mentoring program that will bond alumni with the current student body. This is a very exciting time for MWSU and it is our task as alumni to form these relationships now and assist our current students in making a life for themselves after graduation.

During this special time of year, I ask each of you to get involved with the Alumni Association. We can’t have a great impact without your support and involvement! If you are not currently involved and would like to be, please contact the Alumni Services Office or me.

Alum makes “American Idol” cut

Professor of music Dr. Dennis Rogers described Asa Barnes, ’03, as “electric in front of an audience.”

Apparently, judges for the television show American Idol agreed, because when Asa performed in Cleveland in August 2004, he made the cut to perform for the show in Hollywood.

Dennis said he wasn’t surprised when he found out Asa, a native of Kansas City, Mo., had made the cut. “He has an ability to bring people into the music. He totally grabs an audience by the heart.”

In Cleveland, Asa waited in line with about 20,000 hopefuls for over 15 hours before performing Stevie Wonder’s song “Overjoyed.” Only about 800 were selected for a second audition there, this time in front of American Idol’s celebrity judges. From that number, the select few, Asa among them, advanced to Hollywood.

“Simon’s not as bad as you think he is. He’s bad, but not as bad as you think,” Asa quipped about celebrity judge Simon Cowell.

Who: Ed Hershewe, class of 1972
Degree: Bachelor of Arts in Political Science
Western memory: “The teachers were very approachable. They were so good and understanding.”

Ed Hershewe said the timing of Western becoming a four-year college could not have been better. He said he was ready for college and could not afford to move away for the next two years.

“It was a godsend that we got the four-year college,” he said. “It was a quality education at a good price. It was a wonderful opportunity and I felt fortunate.”

Ed, an attorney who was elected last year to the Board of Governors for the Missouri Bar Association, said the quality of his undergraduate education became more clear to him when he was admitted into law school in Tennessee and was able to compete with students who had gone to Ivy League universities.

Ed graduated from law school in 1976 and began practicing law in Joplin, Mo. As the years passed, his business was taking him all over the globe, and he realized he was spending too much time away from his wife Alison and his five children.

In order to spend more time at home, he and his wife renovated an older building in downtown Joplin, converting it into a state-of-the-art conference center. The center provides videotaping capabilities from cities all over the world, which eliminated the need for most of Ed’s travel. Several organizations and businesses utilize the center, also.

The 15,000 sq. ft. center was “built and designed to be the nicest conference center people are ever going to see. It caters to comfort and efficiency,” he said.

His law career, the conference center, his role on the board - while he is proud of those accomplishments, he said the real measure of his success are the relationships he has with his wife and children.

“That is more important to me. That makes me proud.”

“Oh happy day!” declared Dr. James Scanlon, Western’s president, as he kicked off “It’s All About U!,” the university designation celebration Aug. 28. Hundreds of community members joined Western students and employees as the new entrance sign and a new “U” on the hillside facing Interstate 29 were unveiled.

Free activities in the stadium that included musical entertainment, parachutists and an inflatable carnival were cut short by high winds and threatening weather. The fireworks and carnival were rescheduled for Sept. 1, the date of Western’s first football game as a university.

The formal ceremony to recognize Western’s new university designation was held Aug. 31. Former presidents Dr. M.O. Looney and Dr. Janet Gorman Murphy McCarthy spoke at the event, and received the first honorary degrees from the university.
