Teaching Philosophy

- Relevant: Every business issue can be complex but it extends from established and common foundations of theory. I strive to stress the analytical tools, frameworks, and encourage higher-order critical thought to understand what is expected of us as business-people, consumers, and as citizens in all of my courses.
- Applicable: Our society becomes more complex by the day, and so goes the responsibilities and expectations of our leaders. I seek to illuminate situations through case study analyses that simulate prudent integration of useable skills for all of my courses.
- Positive: The military showed me how powerful it is to be strict as well as positive in instruction. I seek to present the information to challenge students, give positive feedback, and be affirming with earned accomplishments in all of my courses.

Leadership Philosophy

- Clarify Values: I lead in an organization by taking the time to identify core values and an organization's mission. Alignment of values to work policies and productivity are essential.
- Following Policy: I lead through compliance to an organization's policies. Rules and laws are important frames for one's work-product.
- Build Trust With Colleagues: I lead in an environment through engaging those I work with and work for with collegial relationships and soliciting input. Stakeholder buy-in is necessary for a lasting effort to be accomplished and endure.
- Consistent Self-Evaluation: I lead by not rushing to condemn a colleague or process until I can rationally evaluate the issue. The importance to maintain professionalism is at the highest priority for sustained work relationships.
- Listening: I lead through encouraging an open environment of critique of work, management, and expectations. Listening to surveys, stakeholder feedback, and team insights create the best work-product.
- Effective Action: I lead by taking action and responsibility of outcomes produced under my charge of management. Effective action in confronting challenging issues and people with composure is necessary for a leader.
